About the Network and Field Services

In the telecom industry, field service management (FSM) helps manage and coordinate the activities of field service technicians responsible for installing, repairing, and maintaining telecom equipment.

Efficient workforce organization in the telecommunication sector is a key factor enabling process optimization and increased business productivity. However, with a large number of specialists in different areas, and numerous geographic locations in diverse regions, managing field work optimally becomes much more complicated. With additional factors such as the need for ad hoc rescheduling related to infrastructure failures, and the requirement to manage the effectiveness of subcontracted employees, automating the processes of field service planning, scheduling and reporting become an absolute necessity.

Telecom field services is driven by hyper-competition. It needs great adaptation towards disruptive technologies to:

- Improve how telecommunication companies operate their networks
- Deliver service to their customers

- And communicate with each other
